With Morocco and Mauritania attempting to seize former Spanish West Africa, Polisario guerrillas attacked Mauritania's vital iron-ore mines at Zouerate, destroying major facilities. The raid led to Morocco sending troops to assist, though attacks continued on the ore railway to the coast. A year later President Mokhtar Ould Daddah was deposed and Mauritania abandoned the war (1 May 1977).

Zsibó ❙ 1705 ❙ Rákóczi Rebellion

Prince Ferenc II Rákóczi of Transylvania raised rebellion against Austria and faced a major offensive by Count Ludwig von Herbeville. Rákóczi tried to block the Austrian advance in the mountains of northwest Romania, but near Zalau at Zsibó (modern Jibon), he suffered a decisive defeat, losing perhaps 5,000 killed. Herbeville quickly retook most of Transylvania (11 November 1705).

Zubiri (1st) ❙ 1836 ❙ 1st Carlist War

French Foreign Legion Colonel Joseph Bernelle was sent to support the Spanish government and attacked Carlists threatening the garrison at Zubiri, northeast of Pamplona near Larrasoaña. Fighting in heavy snow, the Carlists were driven off with over 100 casualties and 30 prisoners executed as a reprisal. Another Carlist attack was driven off a month later at nearby Tirapegui (24 March 1836).

Zubiri (2nd) ❙ 1836 ❙ 1st Carlist War

Following his costly success near Larrasoaña at Tirapegui, northeast of Pamplona in Navarre, French Foreign Legion Colonel Joseph Bernelle joined a Spanish government force in a second assault on the Carlists further east at Zubiri. A one-sided disaster saw the Carlists driven off with about 1,500 casualties, but Bernelle was soon replaced in command (1 August 1836).

Zug ❙ 1531 ❙ Swiss Religious Wars

Amid open warfare between Catholics and Protestants in Switzerland, a large Catholic army defeated and killed Reformation leader Ulrich Zwingli at Kappel (11 October) before facing a better-organised Protestant force from Berne and other cities. South of Zurich at Zug, the Catholics were again victorious and Switzerland was permanently divided along religious lines (24 October 1531).

Zuili ❙ 496 BC ❙ Wars of China's Spring and Autumn Era

In the struggle between Wu and Yue for the fertile Yangzi Delta, King He-lü of Wu invaded neighbouring Yue against King Goujian. In battle at Zuili, near modern Jiaxing in Zhejian, He-lü's army was badly defeated and He-lü himself died of wounds. His son and successor Fuchai had his revenge against Goujian two years later at Fuqiao.

Zurawno ❙ 1676 ❙ Turkish Invasion of the Ukraine

Recovering after defeat at Zloczow and Soczawa, a reputed 200,000 Turks and Tatars under Ibrahim Shetan besieged John III Sobieski of Poland in his fortified camp at Zurawno (modern Zhuravno), on the Dniester east of Stryy. The Turks withdrew after costly losses, but they returned the following year to make a final attempt on the Ukraine at Chigirin (September–October 1676).

Zurich (1st) ▌ 1799 ▌ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

French General André Masséna fell back from a bloody encounter east of Zurich at Wetzikon and days later found himself facing a fresh offensive with superior numbers by Archduke Charles of Austria. In four days of inconclusive battle near Zurich, both sides suffered heavy casualties before Masséna was forced to continue withdrawing west and the Austrians occupied the city (4–7 June 1799).

Zurich (2nd) ▌ 1799 ▌ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

Two months after being driven into western Switzerland by the much larger Austrian army of Archduke Charles, French General André Masséna attempted a counter-offensive and advanced on Zurich. Costly fighting saw him again repulsed and he withdrew to prepare for a second and more successful offensive six weeks later (14 August 1799).

Zurich (3rd) ▌ 1799 ▌ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

With Archduke Charles of Austria absent in Germany, French Generals André Masséna and Charles-Nicolas Oudinot launched an offensive in Switzerland against Russian General Alexander Korsakov, who was routed in a two-day battle at Zurich. General Alexander Suvorov arrived from Italy too late to prevent the disaster and was in turn driven back to the Rhine (25–26 September 1799).

Zurmat ▌ 1869 ▌ Later Afghan War of Succession

Despite defeat at Kila Alladad in late 1867, Sher Ali and his son Yakub Khan gradually recovered Afghanistan from the usurper Azim Khan, retaking Kandahar (April 1868) and Kabul (September 1868). The decisive mid-winter campaign in Zurmat, east of Ghazni, saw Sher Ali's brother Azim and nephew Abdur Khan finally defeated. Britain then recognised Sher Ali as Amir (January 1869).

Zusmarshausen ▌ 1648 ▌ Thirty Years War (Franco-Habsburg War)

French Marshal Henri de Turenne and Sweden's Marshal Karl Gustav Wrangel led a renewed advance into Bavaria and pursued the Bavarian-Imperial army of Marshal Peter Melander and Count Raimondo Montecuccoli to the Danube. Melander was defeated and killed in a rearguard action at Zusmarshausen, west of Augsburg, and the allies overran Bavaria as far as the Inn (17 May 1648).

Zutphen ▌ 1586 ▌ Netherlands War of Independence

Prompted by the fall of Antwerp (August 1585), England's Queen Elizabeth sent Robert Dudley Earl of Leicester to the Netherlands, where he besieged Zutphen, near Arnhem, defended by Spanish commander Juan Bautista Tassis. Leicester was routed by a relief column under the Marques del Vasto (his nephew Sir Philip Sidney was killed) and he returned home (22 September 1586).

Zutphen ▌ 1591 ▌ Netherlands War of Independence

With Alexander Farnese Duke of Parma occupied in France, Prince Maurice of Orange began an offensive along the Dutch Coast. After capturing Breda (March 1590), he besieged Zutphen, which had held out against attack five years earlier. Supported by his cousin William Louis of Nassau, Maurice took the city after just seven days and went on to capture Deventer and Nijmegen (24–30 May 1591).

Zuyder Zee ▌ 1573 ▌ Netherlands War of Independence

As Spanish forces under Don Fadrique Alvarez besieged the Dutch city of Alkmaar, the defenders opened the dikes to flood the area to the east and Spanish ships under Maximilien de Henin Count Bossu came up to support the siege. On the nearby

Zuyder Zee, Dutch Admiral Kornelius Dirkszoon defeated and captured Bossu and the siege of Alkmaar ended (11 October 1573).

Zuyper Sluys ❙ 1799 ❙ French Revolutionary Wars (2nd Coalition)

General Sir Ralph Abercromby and advance units of the expedition to northern Holland landed at Groote Keeten and marched on Zuyper Sluys, near Alkmaar, where they were attacked by French General Guillaume Brune with Dutch support. Brune was driven off with 2,000 casualties and Frederick Augustus Duke of York arrived three days later with the main Allied force (10 September 1799).

Zwettl ❙ 1427 ❙ Hussite Wars

On campaign against Sigismund of Bohemia, Bohemian Hussite leader Prokob the Bald raided into Silesia, then marched into Austria against Sigismund's son-in-law Duke Albert. Northwest of Linz at Zwettl, Prokob routed an Austrian army with massive casualties—the first major Hussite victory on foreign soil—then returned home to meet a new invasion at Tachov (12 March 1427).

Appendix

This project was conceived as a dictionary of battles and sieges, not a dictionary of wars. However, some wars do not have specific recorded battles but remain sufficiently significant in their own right to be included in this appendix. For fuller details on these wars, and on history's many low-level conflicts and insurgencies, the reader is referred initially to the multi-volume Cambridge History series; the Encyclopedia of Military History (Dupuy and Dupuy) or the Dictionary of Wars (Kohn). This chronological appendix does not include the many low-level wars fought since 1945, which are well summarised in the existing literature, including Wars in the Third World since 1945 (Arnold), An Encyclopedic Dictionary of Conflict and Conflict Resolution, 1945–1996 (Jessup) and Conflicts after World War II (Ciment).

Nubian Conquest of Egypt ❙ 750–730 BC

After King Kashta of Nubian Kush conquered Upper Egypt and became ruler of Thebes, his son and successor Piankhy led a massive force into Egypt itself. Following his bloody capture of Memphis, Piankhy overthrew the Lybian Dynasty and reunited Egypt. When Esarhaddon of Assyria invaded Egypt in 671 BC the last Nubian Pharaoh Taharqa withdrew to Napata and continued to rule Kush.

1st Messenian War ❙ 736–716 BC

With Dorian forces from northern Greece gradually conquering the Peleponnese, Sparta attacked Messenia in the southwest, greedy to control the fertile Pámisos River Valley. Despite prolonged resistance by the native population around Mount Ithome, King Theopompus of Sparta finally captured the region and established the Messenians as helots, or state serfs, bound to hand over half their produce to Sparta.

Lelantine War ❙ 725–700 BC

One of the most important military conflicts of the early period of Greek history involved the cities of Chalcis and Eretria, on the island of Euboea, in a prolonged struggle to control the fertile Lelantine Plain. As allies joined either side, the Greek world split into rival trade blocks, and fighting spread across the entire area. But there is no certain information about the war, its time frame or the exact outcome.

2nd Messenian War ❙ 650–630 BC

A bloody rebellion against their Spartan masters (the Great Revolt) saw Messenians rise up under the semi-legendary leader Aristomenes. After initial success, the Messenians were defeated at the so-called Battle of the Great Trench and withdrew under siege to Mount Eira. When the stronghold fell, reputedly after 11 years, Aristomenes fled into exile and Messenia continued as a serf state.

Median-Persian War ▌ 553–550 BC

Opening a brilliant career, Cyrus II of Anshan (part of Persia) started a revolt against his grandfather and overlord, Astyages (Ishtuwegu) of Media. After prolonged war, the Median army mutinied, allowing Cyrus to capture Astyages and the capital Ecbatana. Cyrus secured Media then began building the great Achaemenid Persian Empire by defeating Croesus of Lydia (Astyages' son-in-law) at Pteria.

Persian War of Succession ▌ 521–519 BC

In the disputed succession following the death of Cambyses II of Persia, his cousin Darius seized the throne, then fought a complex war to defend it against usurpers and other claimants. In a far-reaching campaign, he put down repeated revolts in Babylonia, Media, Susiana, Armenia and inside Persia itself, as well as in Egypt. With internal order restored, he then set about rebuilding the glory of the Persian Empire.

Persia's Scythian Expedition ▌ 516–509 BC

Having restored authority within Persia, Darius attacked the Scythians east of the Caspian (519 BC), then turned west against the Scythians in Thrace. In the first attack of Asia upon Europe, Darius advanced beyond the Danube while his satraps turned towards Macedonia. A Scythian scorched-earth policy eventually forced Darius back across the Bosphorus, but he soon returned to attack Greece itself.

3rd Messenian War ▌ 464–455 BC

When a severe earthquake struck Sparta, the helots (state serfs) of Messenia once again rose in revolt and won some early victories. But King Archidamus II of Sparta soon brought heavy forces to bear, and the rebellion was crushed when the fortified position on Mount Ithome fell, and many survivors fled into exile. Messenia was eventually liberated after Spartan defeat in 371 BC at Leuctra.

2nd Sacred War ▌ 449–448 BC

In an effort to exert influence with the Oracle in the Temple of Apollo at Delphi, Sparta sent an armed force to Delphi, and encouraged the citizens to renounce control by Phocis and declare independence. The intervention caused a major rift within the Sacred League and Athenian forces under Pericles marched into Delphi to reinstate the Phocians in control of the sacred city.

Wars of the Mauryan Empire ▌ 321–232 BC

In the wake of Alexander the Great's invasion of India, Chandragupta Maurya seized the throne of Magadha and began a campaign to unite the north of the sub-continent. His son Bindusara and grandson Ashoka further extended the empire and Ashoka conquered Kalinga (Orissa) to unite nearly all of India. He then renounced war and adopted Buddhism, and the Mauryan Empire soon fell into decline.

Damascene War ▌ 280–275 BC

Following the death of the great Seleucid King Seleucus I, Ptolemy II Philadelphus, the Macedonian King of Egypt, campaigned against Antiochus I in Asia Minor, then marched into Seleucid Syria. In a confused campaign, the capital Damascus appears to have changed hands several times before Ptolemy eventually withdrew. Soon afterwards, Antiochus invaded Egypt to trigger the 1st Syrian War.

1st Syrian War ▌ 274–271 BC

When war resumed between Ptolemy II Philadelphus of Egypt and the Seleucid King Antiochus I, Syrian forces marched south into Phoenicia and other territory claimed by Egypt. Ptolemy defeated his half-brother Magas, Governor of Cyrenaica, who had allied himself with the Seleucids and, by the time Antiochus sued for peace, Ptolemy had secured significant parts of Syria, as well as land in Asia Minor.

2nd Syrian War ▌ 260–255 BC

After victory in the Chremonidian War, Antigonus II of Macedonia joined the Seleucid Antiochus II against their rival Ptolemy II Philadelphus of Egypt. Antigonus won a largely naval war in Asia Minor, while Antiochus retook Phoenicia, which had been seized from his father. Ptolemy made peace, marrying his daughter Berenice to Antiochus, but her subsequent murder (246 BC) triggered the 3rd Syrian War.

War of Demetrius ▌ 239–229 BC

With Macedonia struggling in the Peloponnese after the loss of Corinth (243 BC), the new King Demetrius II faced an unexpected coalition of the Aetolian and Achaean Leagues. A complex and obscure war of changing alliances ended when Demetrius was killed by invading Dardanians. Macedonian influence in Peloponnese effectively came to an end, and the Achaean League reached its greatest extent.

2nd Greek Social War ▌ 219–217 BC

Antigonus III of Macedon secured much of the Peloponnese through the Achaean League after victory at Sellasia (222 BC). After his death, his teenage cousin Philip V faced war when the Achaeans sought Macedonian aid against the rival Aetolian League. Philip defeated the Aetolian League and its allies and eventually secured the Peace of Naupactus (this is also known as the War of the Allies).

1st Macedonian War ▌ 215–205 BC

As Rome struggled in the early years of the 2nd Punic War, Philip V of Macedon launched a campaign against Roman Illyria along the Adriatic coast. After years of indecisive action, Philip turned south against the Greek city-states, where Rome supported an anti-Macedonian coalition led by Aetolia. With Rome now winning the war against Carthage, Philip finally sued for peace.

Lusitanian Wars ▌ 154–138 BC

Lusitanians in modern Portugal and western Spain, led by the warrior Punicus (and later Kaisaros), ravaged Roman territory and inflicted heavy losses until they finally agreed to peace (151 BC). A new leader, Viriathus, later renewed the war (147 BC) and defeated several Roman forces. Consul Servilius Caepio then bribed three of the leader's friends to murder Viriathus and the war came to an end.

Celtiberian Wars ▌ 153–133 BC

As Roman forces conquered the Iberian Peninsula, they met fierce resistance from Celtic tribes in the mountainous regions of north central Spain. After suffering some very costly losses, Rome gradually gained the upper hand. However, Rome's preoccupation with the 3rd Punic War (149–146 BC) saw renewed resistance and further heavy fighting. Celtic resistance was finally crushed at the siege of Numantia.

Syrian-Parthian War ▌ 141–139 BC

Parthians under Mithridates I invaded Babylonia, where they were checked by the Seleucid Demetrius II Nicator. While details of the war are uncertain, Demetrius was decisively defeated by the invaders on the Iranian Plateau. After ten years in captivity, he was released as a possible counter to his brother and successor Antiochus VII, who was routed in the Later Syrian-Parthian War at Ecbatana.

Chinese Conquest of Vietnam ▌ 111 BC

The Trieu Dynasty in Nam Viet (the northern part of modern Vietnam) came under increasing Chinese influence until the Han Emperor Wu Di sent a large force under General Lo Bac Duc to seize the country. The young King Trieu Vuong Duong was defeated and killed, beginning 1,000 years of almost uninterrupted Chinese domination, which was finally overthrown at Bach Dang in 938.

2nd Servile War ▌ 104–99 BC

Slave war broke out again in Sicily, where a leader named Salvius besieged the city of Murgantia in the east, while Athenion in the west attacked Lilybaeum. The two forces united, but were defeated near Triocala by Lucius Lucullus, who was then forced to withdraw. A fresh Roman force under Consul Marcus Aquilius eventually defeated and killed both leaders, and the survivors were hunted down.

Lepidus Revolt ▌ 77 BC

Roman Consul Aemilius Lepidus attempted to rescind some reforms of the late Dictator Sulla and took an army from northern Italy against Rome. Outside Rome at Milvian Bridge, Lepidus was repulsed by Quintus Lutatius Catulus and driven back to Etruria, where he was defeated again by Pompey. Lepidus' ally Marcus Junius Brutus was besieged then murdered, in Mutina. Lepidus himself died soon after in Sardinia.

1st Satavahana-Saka War ▌ 80–106

The Satavahana built the Andhra Empire, which covered most of southern India, then faced a prolonged campaign by the Saka Chiefs (Western Satraps) who seized Malwa and northern Deccan. A powerful new ruler, Gautamiputra Satakani, then inflicted a crushing defeat on the Sakas and regained lost land as well as Gujarat and Rajputana. The gains were lost soon after his death.

2nd Jewish Rising ▌ 115–117

The Cyrenian Messianic leader Lukuas-Andreas began a campaign to free Palestine from Roman rule, and costly rebellion broke out in Cyprus, Cyrenia, Egypt and Mesopotamia. Emperor Trajan sent General Marcius Turbo and the Mauretanian Lusius Quietus to crush the rising, which was put down with very heavy Jewish losses. A few years later, a final rising under Bar-Cocheba was crushed at Aelia.

2nd Satavahana-Saka War ▌ 126–131

Gautamiputra Satakani of the Satavahana defeated the Sakas (Western Satraps) of northwest India, but when he died, his son Pulumayi was attacked by the powerful Saka Chief Rudradamani, who seized Malwa, Gujarat and Rajputana. Driven back to the Deccan, Pulumayi made peace and married one of Rudradamani's daughters, but within 100 years the Andhra Empire had disappeared.

Egyptian-Nubian War ▌ 641–652

When Muslims conquered Egypt, their cavalry under Nafi ibn Abd al-Kays marched into Christian Nubia (641–642) but were heavily repulsed. A second, much larger, invasion under Abd Allah ibn Sa'd (651–652) laid siege to the Dongala (Dunqulah), capital of Makurra. The ensuing peace treaty regulated Egyptian-Nubian relations for 600 years and saw the flowering of Nubian Christianity.

Shi'ite Rebellion ▌ 814–819

The Shi'ite leader Abu 'l-Saraya raised rebellion against Caliph al-Ma'mun and, after defeating an Abbasid Imperial army at Kufa, marched to threaten Baghdad. Loyalist General Harthama ibn Ayan defeated Abu 'l-Saraya, who was later executed, and Mecca was recaptured. Al-Ma'mun declared a Shi'ite successor and withdrew, but in 819, he returned to rebuild the caliphate and restore Sunni authority.

Paulician War ▌ 867–872

Successive Byzantine Emperors persecuted the Paulicians, a heretic sect in Armenia, who eventually established a powerful base at Tephrike (modern Divrig, Turkey). Under Karbeas, and later Chrysocheir (Chrysocheres), the Paulicians fought with the Arabs against Byzantium until Emperor Basil I launched an offensive which killed Chrysocheir, crushed the sect and dispersed the survivors.

Muslim Civil War ▌ 936–944

When Caliph Ahmad ar-Radi appointed Muhammad ibn Raiq amir al-umara (Army Chief), he drove the Ikhshids of Egypt out of northern Syria and defeated the Hamdanids. He was killed by an assassin sent by al-Hasan of Syria, who took over Baghdad as Amir, with the title Nasir al-Dawla. After further fighting, Nasir was driven out by the Turk Tuzun, who made peace recognising Nasir in northern Syria.

Muslim Civil War ▌ 945–948

During war over Syria between the Hamdanids of Baghdad and the Ikhshids of Egypt, Muhammad ibn Tughdj, Governor of Egypt, invaded Syria and defeated Sayf al-Dawla, forcing a partition. But when Ibn Tughdj died (947), al-Dawla twice advanced on Damascus, where he was defeated by Kafur, effective ruler of Ikhshid Egypt. The ensuing peace saw Cairo keep Damascus and Baghdad retain Aleppo.

Muslim Civil War ▌ 968–978

In the continuing struggle for Syria, Karmati leader Hasan al-A'sam of Bahrein defeated the Ikhshid army in Damascus, then faced the new Fatimid rulers of Egypt. Al-A'sam, with Hamdanid aid, twice repulsed the Fatimids and advanced to besiege Cairo. But, in September 978, new Fatimid Caliph al-Aziz personally led a massive army to defeat the Karmati at Ramleh and secure southern Syria.

Arduin's Wars ▌ 1004–1014

When Arduin, Marquis of Ivrea, proclaimed himself King in Lombardy, Emperor Henry II took a large force into Italy, where Arduin was defeated and forced to flee. Henry had himself crowned in Pavia (1004), then burned much of the city. In 1014 Arduin encouraged further rebellion and Henry returned. The Pope proclaimed Henry Emperor and his Germans again defeated Arduin, who withdrew to a monastery.

Chola-Pala War ▌ 1021–1024

Rajendra Chola continued his father's expansion of the South Indian kingdom, conquering the Andaman and Nicobar Islands, then turned north to invade the great Pala Kingdom of Bengal. In a brilliant campaign, he inflicted a decisive defeat on Mahipala I, leading to the decline of the northern dynasty. However, within fifty years, the Chola Dynasty was in turn eclipsed by the Chalukya.

Byzantine-Venetian War ▌ 1171–1177

Emperor Manuel attacked Venetians in Byzantium, and Doge Vitale Michiel II retaliated by leading a force which seized Ragusa (Dubrovnik), then attacked Chios. Driven off by plague, Vitale returned home, where he was murdered. Venice later supported the failed siege of Ancona (1173), and when they formed an alliance with Sicily (1175), Manuel made peace, and Venetian trading privileges were restored.

Muslim War of Succession ▌ 1196–1200

When Ayyubid Sultan Saladin died (1193), his empire was divided between his sons and brother al Malik al-'Adil (Sayf al-Din). In the ensuing dispute, al-'Adil supported Prince al-'Aziz in Egypt against his brother. But when al-'Aziz died (1198), al-'Adil pursued Prince al-Afdal from Syria to Egypt, where he defeated his forces. Al-'Adil proclaimed himself Sultan in Cairo, sharing the empire with his own sons.

Mongol Conquest of Korea ▌ 1231–1241

At the start of a new era of Mongol expansion, Ogedai (son of Genghis Khan) sent General Subetai to Korea. There he secured some of the main cities and left Mongol Governors in charge when he returned to China to defeat the Jin at Yuxian. In the face of local rebellion, Ogedai sent a second expedition in 1235, which gradually retook the country, and Mongol puppet Kings ruled until 1392.

Rise of Mali ▌ 1235–1332

After the fall of Sosso at Kirina (1235), a prolonged war of consolidation and expansion saw the rise of the massive Mandingo Empire of Mali in West Africa, reaching its maximum extent under the military leader Mansa Musa (1312–1332). However, from the mid-fourteenth century, dynastic struggles, border raids and outlying revolt saw the empire steadily decay. In 1433, Timbuktu itself fell to Tuareg invaders.

Mamluk-Nubian War ▌ 1272–1275

When Mamluks seized Egypt, Sultan Baibars began an aggressive new policy towards Christian Nubia, and sent a large army to support Shekanda, who was claiming the throne from his uncle Dawitt II. After heavy fighting, Dawitt fled from Dongala and Shekanda was installed. But years of royal intrigue followed and, in 1315, Egypt appointed a Muslim-converted Prince as a puppet in northern Nubia.

Hungarian War of Succession ▌ 1301–1308

The 400-year Arpad Dynasty of Hungary came to an end in 1301 with the death of King András III, last of the male line, plunging the country into civil war between rival claimants Wenceslaus III of Bohemia, Duke Otto III of Bavaria and Charles Robert of Anjou. After eight years of warfare and dispute, Charles Robert was elected King Charles (Károly) I and ruled Hungary until 1342.

Khalji Invasion of Pandya ▌ 1310–1311

Sultan Ala-ud-din seized Kakatiya at Warangal (1310), then sent Malik Kafur into southern India, where he overcame Vira Ballala III of Dhorasamudra, then invaded Pandya. Kafur defeated the brothers Vera and Sundara Pandya, and looted the kingdom and its capital Madura. He returned with the largest booty ever taken to Delhi, but soon lost favour in court intrigue (19 October 1310–24 April 1311).

1st Ethiopian-Ifat War ▌ 1320–1332

Amda Siyon (Tseyon) of Christian Ethiopia declared war on his Muslim neighbours and invaded Ifat, where he defeated and killed King Haqedin (Hakk al-Din). He then overwhelmed Haqedin's son and Ifat became a tributary state. A revolt in 1332 by Sabredin was put down and his ally the King of Adal was killed. Siyon also seized a number of other Muslim princedoms.

War of the Eight Saints ▌ 1375–1378

In revolt against the French Pope Gregory XI, Florence joined Milan and other cities. Led by a council of magistrates—the Eight Saints—Florence enjoyed initial success before the rebellious states were ravaged by a Papal army under Cardinal Robert of Geneva (later, anti-Pope Clement VII). Florence was eventually able to negotiate a peace, and Gregory returned the Papacy to Rome.

2nd Ethiopian-Ifat War ▌ 1415

When Yeshak became Emperor of Christian Ethiopia (1414), be began an aggressive new policy and took a large army against Sultan Sa'd ad-Din, who had launched a fresh rebellion in Muslim Ifat, roughly modern Somalia and Djibouti. The army of Ifat was crushed and Sa'd ad-Din escaped to an offshore island, where he was pursued and killed. Ifat was annexed and ceased to exist.

Scandinavian Revolt ▌ 1433–1439

Erik XIII of Sweden, who ruled Denmark, Norway and Sweden (the Kalmar Union), faced armed rebellion in Sweden under Engelbrekt Engelbrektsson, which soon spread. Erik was deposed and Engelbrektsson became Administrator of Sweden, but was murdered in 1436. Erik was restored but fresh revolt broke out, and rebel leader Karl Knutsson became Administrator. Erik was finally deposed in 1439.

Hungarian-Bohemian War ▌ 1469–1478

When the Hussite George of Podebrad became King of Bohemia, Pope Paul III induced Matthias I Corvinus of Hungary to invade in support of the Catholic nobility. After initial defeat, Hungarian troops seized Brno, where Matthias was declared King (3 May 1469). George and then his son Ladislaus fought on until 1478, when two Kings of Bohemia were recognised, and Matthias kept his conquests until his death.

Spanish Conquest of Haiti ▌ 1494–1509

When Christopher Columbus returned to Haiti (Española), his brother Bartholomew and Alonso de Hojeda crushed the native Taino and seized their Chief Caonabo. The Magua Chief Guarionex was also defeated, and a fresh force under Nicholas Ovando crushed the Zaraguayans and hanged their Queen Anacaona. Within a few years the original Haitians were annihilated by slavery and European diseases.

Funj-Nubian War ▌ 1504–1505

With the Christian kingdom of Alwah, south of Dongala, crumbling in the face of Arab pressure from the north, nomadic cattle herdsmen in the mountains of the Blue Nile, known as the Funj, began to assert their presence. They invaded to defeat a local force and Amara Dunqas built his capital at Sennar to establish a new "Black Sultanate" in the region of Khartoum. The Funj soon converted to Islam.

Spanish Conquest of Puerto Rico ▌ 1508–1511

Conquistador Juan Ponce de Leon arrived in Puerto Rico in 1508 and was initially welcomed by the Taino Chief (Caicique) Agueybana. But in the face of brutal suppression, Agueybana began a belated revolt which was crushed by the well-armed Spaniards. Agueybana was shot dead, and his brother Agueybana II eventually accepted a peace which saw his people decimated by slavery and smallpox.

Spanish Conquest of Cuba ▌ 1511–1513

Governor Diego Columbus of Española (Haiti) sent an expedition under Diego Velásquez de Cuélla to seize Cuba. He and his lieutenant, Pánfilo de Narváez, met determined resistance led by the Taino Chief Hatuey, who had also crossed with his supporters from Española. After a harsh guerrilla war, Hatuey was betrayed and burned at the stake (12 February 1512) and remaining resistance was soon crushed.

Maya Revolt ▌ 1546–1547

Leading a final Spanish expedition against the Northern Maya of the Yucatan (1540), Francisco de Montejo the Younger rapidly seized much of the western peninsula, where he founded the city of Merida (1542). But a few years later, the Spanish faced an upsurge of resistance in the east. In a series of harsh actions, the so-called revolt was crushed and most of the upper peninsula was secured for Spain.

Morisco Revolt ▌ 1568–1570

In the face of religious persecution, Spanish Moors who had converted to Christianity (Moriscos) led a revolt in southern Spain, which began on Christmas Day 1568 in Granada. A brutal war saw the rebels crushed by Iñigo Lopez de Mendoza, Marquis of Mondéjar, and later by Don John of Austria. The survivors were dispersed in northern Spain, but after 1609, perhaps 300,000 were expelled to North Africa.

1st Dutch-Khoikhoi War ▌ 1659–1660

Soon after Jan van Riebeeck established the first permanent settlement in South Africa for the Dutch East India Company (1652), land-hungry free settlers in Western Cape came into armed conflict with native Khoikhoi (formerly known as Hottentots), led by Doman of the Goringhaiqua. Well supplied with horses and rifles, the settlers soon crushed resistance and the Khoikhoi signed a peace treaty.

Revolt of the Three Feudatories ▌ 1671–1681

Three former Qing Generals who helped overthrow the Ming were given feudatories in southern China, but turned against the Kangxi Emperor. Wu Sangui proclaimed a new Zhou Dynasty with himself as Emperor, but he soon died. His followers were routed in bloody fighting and his allies Shang Kexi and Geng Jimao were defeated and executed as the rebellion was crushed. Some survivors fled to Taiwan.

2nd Dutch-Khoikhoi War ▌ 1673–1677

Under renewed Dutch pressure for land in the Western Cape, Khoikhoi under leadership of Cochoqua Chief Gonnema struck back against settlers and traders. A series of punitive, costly expeditions caused heavy Khoikhoi losses, but failed to capture Gonnema. However, he eventually agreed to make peace, and his people went into steep decline. In 1713 the Khoikhoi were utterly ravaged by smallpox.

Rise of Dahomey ▌ 1724–1727

The powerful warrior Agaja Trudo of Dahomey defeated and killed the King of Allada (March 1724) and later defeated King Huffon of Whydah (Ouidah) to establish the new kingdom of Dahomey. While Agaja was forced to pay tribute to Oyo from 1730, he built a major power in West Africa, which played a dominant role in the lucrative Atlantic slave trade.

Funj-Ethiopian War ▌ 1730–1755

Badi IV of Funj began a major campaign against Ethiopia, where he and his ally Shaykh Kamis of Nubia defeated an Ethiopian army near Sennar. The Funj marched into Kordofan and, after an initial loss, General Muhammad Abu Likaylik took command and secured victory.

Likaylik then deposed Badi, who was later killed. Protracted intrigue ruined the sultanate, and in 1821 it submitted meekly to Egypt.

Tupac Amaru Revolt ▌ 1780–1782

In a prelude to wars of independence throughout South America, Indians in the Peruvian Andes rose in revolt under Jose Gabriel Condorcanqui, who took the name of his ancestor Tupac Amaru. The rebels failed to take Cuzco, where Tupac Amaru was publicly tortured to death. Resistance continued elsewhere and rebels took Bogota and twice attacked La Paz before the rising was finally crushed.

Haitian Invasion of Dominica ▌ 1822

During the Napoleonic War, Spanish forces drove the French out of Santo Domingo (1809). But when Lieutenant Governor José Nuñez de Cáceres declared an independent state of Spanish Haiti, new President Jean-Pierre Boyer of Haiti led a swift invasion. The Spanish were expelled and Boyer briefly united the entire island of Hispaniola until the Dominican War of Independence in 1844.

Great Java War ▌ 1825–1830

When a Dutch-supported claimant succeeded to the throne of Jogjakarta, Prince Dipo Negoro opposed Dutch land reforms designed to weaken the Javanese nobility. A prolonged guerrilla struggle—cast as a Jihad (Muslim Holy War)—was eventually quelled by General Hendrik Merkus de Kock. Dipo Negoro attended peace talks under safe conduct, but was arrested. He died in exile 25 years later.

Spanish Civil War ▌ 1840–1843

In the wake of the First Carlist War, General Baldomero Espartero became Regent for Queen Isabella II and assumed dictatorial power. Popular risings in Pamplona and Barcelona were severely crushed and when Espartero dissolved the Cortes, General Ramón Narváez marched on Madrid. He seized the capital and Espartero fled. Aged just 13, Isabella assumed government with Narváez as Chief Minister.

Dominican War of Independence ▌ 1844

With the overthrow of President Jean-Pierre Boyer of Haiti, rebellion began in Dominica, led by Juan Pablo Duarte, Francisco del Rosario Sánchez and Ramón Mélla, who forced the Haitians to flee. Caudillo Pedro Santana then had himself declared President of the Dominican Republic and imprisoned his former allies. Santana assumed dictatorial powers and repulsed Haitian invasions in 1849 and 1855.

Caste War of Yucatan ▌ 1846–1901

Not long after Mexico won independence from Spain, war broke out, pitting the Maya of the Yucatan against European-descended Yucatecans and distant central government. A prolonged and bloody struggle ensued, which spilled over into British Honduras. After more than five decades, a Mexican offensive into rebel-held eastern Yucatan virtually ended the war, though skirmishing continued for years.

Dominican War of Restoration ▌ 1863–1864

President Pedro Santana returned the Dominican Republic to Spain (1861), which soon faced guerrilla resistance and later open rebellion under José Antonio Salcedo. Santana took command of Spain's largely mercenary army but, after he died, the nationalists soon prevailed. Spain eventually annulled the annexation and withdrew from Dominica. In early 1865, Dominica's second independence was declared.

Waziristan Campaign ▌ 1936–1937

Following a legal dispute over the marriage of a Muslim schoolteacher and an under-age Hindu girl, rebellion broke out in Waziristan, fanned by a Mullah, the Faqir of Ipi. A large-scale Indian Army presence eventually secured order at high cost in men and resources. Intermittent resistance continued, with further British losses, until the creation of independent Pakistan in 1947. The Faqir died in 1950.

Bibliography

No dictionary of battles could fail to acknowledge the pioneers who led the way—starting with the Reverend Thomas Harbottle whose 1904 Dictionary of Battles was revised and reprinted by George Bruce from 1971 onwards, before it was retitled in 1995 because, as Bruce claimed: "the new title Dictionary of Wars reflects the changed character of war, set battles having long since become antiquated."

Similarly, every military enthusiast owes an enormous debt to Ernest and Trevor Dupuy, the father-and-son team whose monumental Encyclopedia of Military History has been continuously in print since 1970; and the late Brigadier Peter Young, who tragically completed only two volumes of his planned four-part master work, A Dictionary of Battles 1816–1976 (1977) and (with Michael Calvert) A Dictionary of Battles 1715–1815 (1979).

Other useful publications across the full scope of history include David Eggenberger's An Encyclopedia of Battles (1985); John Sweetman's A Dictionary of European Land Battles to 1945 (1984); Michael Sanderson's Sea Battles, a reference guide (1975) and George Kohn's Dictionary of Wars (1988) later retitled Encyclopedia of Wars.

Beyond these publications, the research for this project has recorded well over one thousand separate titles, including national and campaign dictionaries of battles and military history, as well as dozens of national and subject encyclopedias, national dictionaries and databases of biography. Typical of these are the scores of individual national volumes in the monumental Historical Dictionaries series published by Scarecrow Press of Lanham, Maryland, and their outstanding companion series Historical Dictionaries of War, Revolution and Civil Unrest. In addition a priceless debt is owed to the contributors to the magisterial multi-volume series, The Cambridge Ancient History, The Cambridge Medieval History, The Cambridge Modern History and The New Cambridge Modern History as well as the multi-volume Cambridge histories of individual countries such as China, India, Iran and Japan. The research has also included a very large number of invaluable online resources and databases.

The bibliography which follows contains a large number of general books or those covering several major historical eras.

Where possible, however, the sources have been categorised into broad historic periods (adapted from Dupuy and Dupuy) namely: The Ancient World to 600 AD; Medieval Warfare 600–1500; The Early Modern Era 1500–1750; The Century of Revolution 1750–1850; The Rise of Modern Professionalism 1850–1900; World War and Revolution 1900–1939; World War II 1939–1945; War after 1945.

About the Author

TONY JAQUES is an independent scholar. Mr. Jaques was born in New Zealand and graduated in political science, then started his professional life in journalism in New Zealand and London before moving to political speechwriting. He now works and teaches in the field of Corporate Communication and Issue Management, where he has published extensively, for a Fortune 500 company. A schoolboy enthusiasm for World War II became a lifetime passion for military history in all eras. He is currently a resident of Melbourne, Australia.
